Damien T. Richards : The Flow Charts to Financing and Making Your First Feature Film before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The Flow Charts to Financing and Making Your First Feature Film:

HOLLYWOOD WANTS YOU... to join the next generation of producers, directors and scriptwriters. Contrary to popular belief, this does not require spending thousands of dollars at a 4-year film school. This approach is too costly, time consuming, and there are no jobs in Hollywood that require a film school degree. Film schools and online courses expound on techniques that veteran filmmakers use. In essence, people on the student level waste time and money learning how to make big budget blockbuster movies. When in reality, Hollywood never hires film school graduates! At least not to work on movies! But they do hire people to get coffee and run errands. Some of them might have a film school degree. The only guaranteed way for YOU to join the next generation of Hollywood producers, directors, and scriptwriters is to make your first feature film with a $1-million budget and get it into movie theaters. Once you do this, Hollywood will practically beg you to work on their bigger budget projects! But before you start, you need to learn THE BIGGEST HOLLYWOOD SECRET! The rules for making your first feature film are different (and a lot easier) than the rules veteran filmmakers use to make big budget movies. LIGHTS, CAMERA, TAKE ACTION (The Flow Charts to Financing and Making Your First Feature Film) provides step- by-step instructions, reinforced by a series of easy to follow flow charts (to keep you on track) to find/write a dynamic script, develop your movie project, get it financed, produced, shot, and distributed to theaters (and a lot in-between). Why waste thousands of dollars on film schools and online courses that expound on techniques that veteran film- makers use to make big budget movies? Now, for a fraction of the cost, learn all you need to know (reinforced with easy to follow flow charts) to make your first feature film with a $1-million budget and get it into movie theaters. And watch Hollywood come to you!
