A cookbook with an unusual protagonist preparing south-of-the-border recipes for the financially stressed, the economically depressed, and those hungry for laugh in the hard times to come. Like no cookbook ever written.
About the Author
Miles Standish Pickerel lived with his mother until he was thirty-six. After brief engagements as an adulterous husband, a neglectful father, and a larcenous employee, he unsuccessfully impersonated a cardiologist, a cattle rustler, and a visiting dignitary from Guyana. Currently he is at work on the century's first compendium of Mexican mechanics. He lives anonymously in an unnamed city south of the twenty-fifth parallel.
