Collectors beware. If, like me, you already have all the Two Ronnies' joke books from the 1970s, plus Ronnie Barker's excellent anthology "All I Ever Wrote", then you really don't need this "best of" collection. Still, it's a nice variety of material from their long running BBC TV series: their "news" jokes, sketches, and monologues, but, regrettably, NOT their musical parodies, perhaps for space reasons. Also, there's an unfortunate tendency to just pull random lines out of Ronnie Corbett's shaggy dog stories, spoiling the effect somewhat. HOWEVER... If you judge it on its OWN merits... as a convenient, pocket-sized sampler and affectionate souvenir of the duo's comedy it's very good, and DEFINITELY very funny. A final GOOD night from "Me" (Ronnie Corbett) and "Him" (Ronnie Barker). Bless 'em.

While I enjoyed this book, I found it fell short of the title description. Only some of the sketches were included and many were of the same type. "The Two Ronnies" was a versatile series of acts and, had I not been around to see them on TV, I would think from the book that they had a limited range of comedy. The delivery of the book was prompt and ahead of predicted date. And it's goodnight from me

A delightful collection of their comedic works. Funny. Converted the cassette to CD format before uploading to computer and I-pod player.

For nearly 25 years, the Two Ronnies were a TV institution, a much loved double-act but each with his own inimitable, individual appeal. Who could forget Ronnie Barker's hilarious mispronunciation, Mr. Corbett's witty monologues, the risqu limericks, the puns, the patter, and the parody? So enjoy another fun-filled feast of verbal fireworks-inspired classic comedy from the two one-offs who said goodnight but not goodbye. 2 CDs. 2 hrs 2 mins.

About the Author Ronnie Barker and Ronnie Corbett first met in the early 1960s writing and performing with the likes of John Cleese on The Frost Report. The Two Ronnies was launched in 1971 and became a national institution until they called it a day in the mid-1980s. Much of the material was written by Ronnie Barker but there were classic contributions from the likes of Spike Mullins, Peter Vincent, and David Renwick. Ronnie Barker also starred in Porridge and Open All Hours, while Ronnie Corbett made his name with the sitcom Sorry!
